

DONOVAN FLIES TO U.S.; RECESS TALKS IN CUBA

HAVANA, Cuba, Oct. 11 (UPI)

Negotiations for the release of 1,113 Cuban invasion prisoners were recessed indefinitely today on the departure of James B. Donovan, New York attorney representing the prisoners' families for Miami.

Donovan, a Democrat who is campaigning for the Senate seat held by Sen. Jacob Javits (R., N. Y.), left Havana for the second time since his arrival eight days ago to keep a speaking engagement in Buffalo, N. Y.

Informed sources said Donovan sought to see Premier Fidel Castro again at the last minute before his departure, but that he could not contact the Cuban leader. Donovan and Castro met last night for 4 hours to discuss terms for the prisoners' release, but reached no agreement. It was only their second meeting.

Snagged on Details

The talks were understood to be snagged on unspecified details. Speculation that the prisoners would be freed in the immediate future was described as premature by an official spokesman.

Mrs. Berta Barreto, the Cuban liaison agent between the prisoners' families in exile and the Castro regime predicted there would be two or three more meetings between Donovan and Castro, saying "a few details remain to be revised." She declined to elaborate.

Previously, it had been predicted last night's meeting would be the last in the proposed exchange of the prisoners for food, medicine, and some cash.
